

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASETaking Charge of School Refusal Workshop

Princeton, NJ, — (Feb. 23, 2016) — Two presenters will co-lead, a free workshop, “Taking Charge of School Refusal,” at the Sage Day Princeton school on March 18, from 1:00-3:00 p.m. Sage Day Princeton Clinical Director, Jennifer Smith, LCSW and Director of Sage In-District Services, Zack Schwartz, LCSW will be discussing the early signs of school refusal behavior (SRB), followed by common pitfalls in treating SRB and how to successfully transition students back to school. You can register for this workshop here.

"I hope people will gain an appreciation for the collective efforts involved in effectively addressing school refusal behavior," said Schwartz. "To that end, the design of this workshop will be to provide practical information that can be directly applied by both professionals and families."

The Sage Day Schools have worked with school refusing students for more than 18 years in their lower and high schools. This workshop will continue to provide insight for school personnel, families and members of the community.

Smith added, "As a small, therapeutic school, Sage Day is uniquely equipped to work with SRB by providing consistent, and intensive individual, group, and family therapy sessions. Our staff is able to work with students as well as school personnel to develop individualized treatment plans focused on helping the student successfully transition back to the school setting."

Two professional credits will be offered to all workshop participants.
